Attorneys Plead For Mercy For Gangsters

WITNESSES
ASSAILED
BY LAWYERSCounsel for Birger and Companions Making
Final Pleas

Benton, Ill., July 22.—(AP)—Pleas for mercy and attacks on the credibility of state witnesses characterized closing defense arguments today in the trial of Charles Birger, southern Illinois gang chieftain, Art Newman and Ray Hyland for the murder of Mayor Joe Adams of West City, a friend of the rival Sheltons.

Charles Karch began a defense of Birger against testimony offered by Harry Thomasson who accused the gang leader of urging him and his brother Elmo, to kill Adams.

The attorney declared the testimony of an accomplice in crime must be regarded with "great caution." He characterized Thomasson's testimony as "tainted."

"No chain is stronger than its weakest link," he said.

The connecting link which the state alleges exists between Birger and the killing was the meeting at "Shady Rest," Karch declared.

Discredits Witnesses

"If Birger was not there the night before the slaying," he asserted, "then Charles Birger is innocent, even though he had taken the Thomasson boys to his home and stood at bay with his machine guns, defying officers to come and get the boys."

"You cannot gentlemen of the jury, take one day of these defendants' liberty, much less talk about taking their bodies on the testimony of Harry Thomasson," Karch declared.

"Why that Ray Hyland knows more devilry than Charles Birger, if he lived to be a hundred," Karch thundered. Hyland's attorney stopped him and asked him if he did not mean Harry Thomasson. Karch corrected himself.

Charley Greets Judge

During a court recess Birger and Judge Miller chanced to meet in an ante room. Birger, naming one of the witnesses for the state, said: "Why Judge, you know that fellow is nothing but a . . ."

"Let's talk about the prize fight," Charlie, Judge Miller said.

"Well, Judge," he replied, "you've been very fair and if I go down I'll go down smiling without any hard feelings."

"The states attorney has told you to have no sympathy for Birger's wife and children," Karch continued. "I have talked with them and they are unable to believe Birger is the man the state has pictured him to be."

Attorney Rebuked

The prosecutor interrupted and said it was improper to speak of Birger's family. Judge Miller admonished Karch to stay within the record.

Karch turned to the decoy note alleged to have been written by Connie Ritter, a Birger gangster, and given the Thomasson boys to hand to Adams.

"This note was alleged to have been written on December 11, the night before the slaying, and yet it is dated January," Karch asserted.

His Father

Bucharest, July 22.—(AP)—Prince Carol remains in exile and he cannot return either to his father's funeral or later, government officials declared today.

SLOW MOVIES
DO NOT SHOW
A FOUL BLOWDisputed Blow Said to Have Been Landed in Stomach

BULLETIN

New York, July 22.—(AP)—The controversy over whether Jack Dempsey did or did not foul Jack Sharkey before knocking out the Boston sailor last night raged with increasing rather than diminishing fury today.

Even the slow motion pictures of the seventh round failed to settle the dispute. To Tex Rickard, the promoter and a majority of observers present, the pictures revealed Dempsey's blows to the body to be close to the border line, but nevertheless not low enough for disqualification. To others and to Johnny Buckley, Sharkey's manager, the pictures were accepted as proof that two low blows were struck to Sharkey's mid section just before the left hook that sent the sailor down.

New York, July 22.—(AP)—The official slow motion pictures of the Dempsey-Sharkey fight, showing the milling in the seventh round, revealed today that the disputed blow which contributed to Dempsey's victory was apparently fair.

Promoter Rickard after seeing the pictures said that in his opinion the blow was "a fair one, right in the pit of the stomach."

The film was run off three times. The slow motions of the fighters revealed Dempsey struck three hard rights to the stomach before delivering the knockout left to the jaw.

Sharkey's Trunks High

The pictures showed Sharkey rearing his trunk pulled higher up than Dempsey leading newspaper men to assert that this fact had probably contributed much to the dispute over the blow.

"I have never seen heavyweights fight as fast as they did last night," said Rickard. "There was as much action in the seven rounds as you will ordinarily see in 15."

As the slow motion picture of the seventh round was shown Rickard said: "There goes the right. It lands in the pit of the stomach. The blow as I see it is fair. Now the left goes to the jaw. That's the knockout."

The picture showed that a great majority of Dempsey's blows were to the body. They were short vicious jabs and hooks for the most part, many in the ribs or near the pit of the stomach. The continual raining of these blows caused Sharkey to slow up perceptibly after the fourth round.

Few Still Claim Foul

A few newspaper men still claimed the disputed blow was low but the majority agreed that the punch was fair. Although the referee Jack O'Sullivan declared he punched fair, a majority of sports writers whose opinions were reflected in metropolitan newspapers today apparently considered Dempsey landed a low blow just before he knocked out Sharkey with a left to the chin.

Charles Mathison, a judge of the fight, declared he would make this report to the state athletic commission:

"Jack Sharkey was hit below the waist line immediately before the knockout punch and Dempsey should have been disqualified."

Referee Jack O'Sullivan said: "The blow which preceded the knockout punch, a left to the jaw, was a fairly delivered one. It was a right uppercut that landed right on the waist line, but not below."

James A. Farley, chairman of the State Athletic Commission, in a statement relative to the dispute over the knockout blows said:

"I have nothing to say other than the referee who was assigned to that bout rendered the decision as he saw it. This commission has never reversed a decision of its officials."

Menus for the Family

BREAKFAST—Apples, cereal, thin cream, ham omelet, crisp graham toast, orange marmalade, milk, coffee.

LUNCHEON—Corn souffle, tomato jelly salad, nut bread and butter sandwiches, prune pudding, milk, tea.

DINNER—Pot roast of beef, brown gravy, mashed potatoes, buttered parsnips, horseradish and apple salad, graham rolls, cherry pudding, milk, coffee.

The marmalade is suggested in the breakfast menu to furnish the needed touch of piquancy. If you make your own marmalade it can be as bitter or as mild as you prefer it. Keep in mind that carrots scraped and put through the food chopper and simmered in just enough water to prevent burning make a satisfactory "stretcher" as well as a neutralizing agent for the oranges.

Corn Souffle
Two cups canned corn, 3 eggs, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons sugar, 1.8 teaspoon pepper, 2 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons flour, 2 cups milk. Chop corn. Mix and sift sugar, flour, salt and pepper and stir into corn. Beat yolks of eggs until thick and lemon colored. Add to corn mixture. Rinse out bowl in which eggs were beaten with milk and add with softened butter to first mixture. Mix thoroughly and fold in whites of eggs beaten until stiff and dry. Turn into a well-buttered baking dish and bake 25 minutes in a moderate oven. Serve at once from baking dish. (Copyright, 1927, NEA Service, Inc.)

TAKING AVIATION'S PULSE.

One week's aviation news now shows more flying progress than could be noted in several months' reports before Lindbergh flew to Paris. Listing just a few of the recent developments gives an indication of the tremendous progress that is being made.

The endowed Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics has announced that it is ready to give equipment loans for the operation of passenger lines in the United States. It was through equipment loans that many railroads and street railway companies were carried over hard times, and the application of this principle of railroad financing to flying is a healthy sign.

The government has announced that it is soon to begin tests with a floating airdrome such as will ultimately have to be developed for mid-ocean posts if trans-Atlantic commercial flying is to be realized.

Assistant Secretary of Commerce McCracken has announced that cities, especially smaller communities, should help aviation by seeing that the names of the towns are marked by aerial signboards, in order to keep pilots on their air routes.

The railroads are trying to come in on the development by planning a combined air travel by night schedule, linking passenger-carrying airplanes with the passenger trains. The weather bureau has had to expand its organization in order to send out warnings of bad weather over troublesome mountain ranges crossed by air routes. Flying storms is now recognized practice, and alternate routes can be taken if pilots know in advance what flying weather conditions they face.

The 2000 planes and 4000 landing fields in existence at the beginning of the year will be augmented considerably when the census is taken again next January.

And when the British Imperial Airways announced not long ago that they were arming many of their pilots and planes to ward off the danger of air robbery, they were not merely gesturing or looking for publicity. Carrying gold bullion and specie by air has become almost universal in Europe, and the super bandit of the air is all but here.

When any industry prepares against its crooks, the industry may be said to have arrived.

BRASS TACKS IN 2227.

It is to be hoped sincerely that the World Population Conference which meets in Geneva late in August can come to some satisfactory solution as to what is to be done 300 years hence when the people on this sphere will number, according to latest estimates, nearly 8,000,000 souls. It is high time that the world begins to worry about awful impending overcrowding. Think of it, the danger is only three centuries away! It will have to be faced squarely by your great-great-great-great-great-great-grandchildren, who must find space for these eight billions of people or be shoved off into space.

True, Marshal Foch says that there will be the worst world war in history inside of twenty or thirty years, but why should such trifling things as that worry the high minds at Geneva?

THE TINYMITES

STORY BY HAL COCHRAN—PICTURES BY KNICK

Said Scouty, "Goodness, what a plight! I guess we'll have to wait till night. This caramel candy sure sticks fast when melted up like this. We had no business coming here, and we are stuck for hours, I fear. I sort of felt that something, in this land, would go amiss."

So, there they stood, stuck to the street, with caramel clinging to their feet. It wasn't very long until the bunch grew all fagged out. And then the big Marshmallow Man came running up. He said, "My lan! You Tinymites sure look funny. What's the trouble all about?"

"We're stuck and simply can't get out," he heard wee Clowny loudly shout. "Oh, I will help you," he replied. And then he grabbed a stick, and held it out where they could reach. "Now, here's my plan—and it's a peach," said he, "Just grab a hold of this. I'll have you free real quick."

The Tinies did as they were told, and when each one had grabbed a hold, the big man jerked the stick up high, and yanked the whole bunch free. In just a moment they all found that they were safely on the ground. Said Copy, "That was nice of you, and thoughtful as could be."

The big Marshmallow Man just smiled. Said he, "I'm glad to help a child." And then he snapped, "I know a place where you would like to go. Just take this path right out of sight and follow it from left to right. You'll reach the place where jelly beans, on great big bushes, grow."

The man was right, for after while, wee Scouty's face broke into a smile. "Well, just look here," he loudly cried. "I've found a jelly bean." He picked it off the bush right quick. The others shouted, "This is slick." To watch them all pick candy was an interesting scene.

An Ex-Buck PRIVATE goes back to FRANCE

PAUL ADAMS
NEA Service

If, in some future time, France produces a celebrated painter by the name of Albert Duvivier, the success and fame will be attributable to just one thing—the American army puppet.

Ecoutez! which is French for listen, Lester! Albert Duvivier was demobilized from the French army quickly and he returned to St. Juvin, which is near Grand Pre, three weeks after the armistice was signed. Many Americans were in the town, and he, being a photographer with a good camera, took advantage of their presence. In 1919 the American soldiers departed, but they left behind a considerable number of the OD canvases in which they incorporated their packs.

Albert Duvivier had always wanted to become a painter—but he lacked the facilities. So one day, while out salvaging the American stores that had been left behind, he yanked a puppet from a pile of debris. It appeared to be strong and durable. He searched for more. The search brought several dozen to light. He built an easel and bought brushes and colors.

Then, on squares of that puppet canvas, he began to trip out his talent. And he had a talent, too, with no knowledge of art except that which had laid dormant for so many years in his bosom—he copied several masterpieces. Then he took a calendar and reproduced all the illustrations.

SAINT and SINNER

When the door opened to Faith's choking, "Come in!" and she saw Bob standing there, his face showing very white in the twilight, she half started from her chair, but a protesting whimper from Cherry's baby, cradled in her lap, reminded her of her light burden. Her great love for her husband made her want to stretch out her arms to him, to ask him to forgive her for her outburst. But pride proved stronger than love for the moment.

"Sitting in the dark, honey?" Bob's voice strove for casualness. "Want a light?"

"No," Faith answered steadily, glad that he could not see her trembling lips.

In the dim light she saw him stride across the room to the little green painted chiffonier that held the baby's clothes. Her eyelids, which had been drooping wearily over eyes that had cried too long, flew wide with astonishment as she saw him hoist the little piece of furniture to his back and start across the room toward the door with it.

"What—are you going to do—with that?" she gasped, her icy hand closing about her throat. Was this to be his way of telling her that she could no longer take care of Cherry's baby during the night? "Bob, wait, please!"

"Cherry's packing to leave," Bob volunteered from under the weight of the small chest of drawers, but he did not pause on his journey to the door.

"I don't know what her plans are," Bob volunteered as he pushed open the door with his foot and maneuvered his burden through the opening into the hall. "All I know is that she's packing and she wants the baby's things—and the baby, too, I suppose."

Faith ran to the door, her knees trembling so that she feared she would sink to the floor. The baby was held high upon her breast, one of its tiny hands clutching at a loosened strand of her dark hair.

"Come back here, Bob!" she commanded him fiercely. "Are you crazy? Don't you know we can't let her go like this? Come back, I say!" She would later be amazed at her own temerity in ordering her husband about, but now she had no room in her mind for anything but fear and horror—horror of herself.

Bob Hathaway set the little chiffonier down with a thump, drew a handkerchief out of the breast pocket of his coat and mopped his forehead with maddening slowness before he obeyed her. When he had closed the door upon her re-entrance into the room, Faith had laid the baby in its crib, and was ready to confront him, hands clenched upon her breast, her eyes glittering like black diamonds in the fading light.

"Did you tell my sister to leave this house?" she panted, unable to control her voice.

Bob took two steps toward her, then halted, still mopping his face with his handkerchief. "When, it's hot," he groaned. "No, Faith, I didn't tell her to leave. It wasn't necessary. What you said to her was enough. I don't think any woman with pride would want to continue to live upon her sister after a

This new companion invention adds a further step in efficiency by actually converting hitherto wasted heat into useful power.

With the Super-Six Principle, which converts to useful power, energy that in other types is lost in vibration, the new Hudson invention combines the highest efficiency in power, smoothness and long motor life ever achieved within our knowledge.

Added Fuel Economy—Greater Power—Steam Engine Smoothness

The new Hudson motor gives the snap and performance of the high-compression type without sacrifice of flexibility and smoothness.

Spark knock is positively prevented. Regular gasoline gives the performance sought, in other types, through the use of special and costly fuels.

Oil dilution is prevented. Greater power, speed and fuel economy are obtained. Every phase of performance is brilliantly better. These two Hudson inventions give a performance and reliability supremacy that are immediately and continuously apparent whether you drive your Hudson a city block or a hundred thousand miles.

DEMPSEY'S VICTORY WAS MARRED BY QUESTIONABLE BLOW JUST BEFORE FINAL

Many Observers Claim He Fouled Sharkey in Seventh

BY ALLAN J. GOULD
Associated Press Sporting Editor
New York, July 22—(AP)—The "hollow shell" of Hollywood and today Jack Dempsey at 32, is on the high road of a sensational comeback after a stunning knockout victory over Jack Sharkey, 24.

In a dramatic and sudden finish the former heavyweight king dropped Sharkey for the count in the seventh round of their 15 round match.

A vicious right to the mid section—a blow that aroused bitter controversy as to whether it was fair or foul—started Sharkey downward and a short left hook, flush to the chin, completed the downfall. Sharkey and his handlers claimed a foul and they were supported by many ringside observers, but the referee, Jack O'Sullivan, after a moment of hesitation decided it was fair and tolled the count that brought victory to the somewhat battered Dempsey.

Hard Won Triumph.
It was a hard won triumph. It was a slashing mauling battle that saw Dempsey rally from impending defeat in the first round, batter his young rival on the body and finally bring him down. It was a stirring battle that saw Jack summon back much of his old punching power and gameness and much of his old stamina.

Whatever the elements of dispute aroused by Dempsey's finishing blows the victory was sufficiently decisive to restore much of his old prestige, gain him a great ovation, and lift him over the first of his comeback barriers to a return championship battle with his conqueror, Gene Tunney.

Although Promoter Rickard today declined to make a definite announcement, it is regarded as likely that Dempsey and Tunney will fight between Sept. 15 and 20, possibly in Philadelphia, where they met last year, but probably at Soldier's Field in Chicago.

The present Dempsey may not be the "Dempsey of Toledo." He may not, either, be as formidable as he was four years ago, but he has come a long way along the comeback trail, observers seem agreed.

Was Close to Defeat.
In the first round he was perilously close to defeat. He was tottering, groggy, under the solid hooks to the head, and bleeding from the mouth, but he weathered this storm and kept plunging in to the body.

It took only a few seconds for the finishing picture but it was thrilling. Not only was their controversy over whether Dempsey's blows were fair or foul, but wide difference of opinion as to whether it was a right or left to the body that as low and a right or left to the head that provided the climax. But Dempsey and Sharkey agreed it was a right hook to the body and a left hook to the jaw.

Referee Hesitated.
Dempsey came out of his corner in the seventh and ripped in close. They had whirled around, Dempsey's head buried in Sharkey's shoulders when suddenly Dempsey sank a short vicious blow to the sailor's waist line. Sharkey turned his head toward the referee, apparently to claim a foul, and doubled up but they were still mixing as Dempsey shot over his left. There had been no attempt by Referee O'Sullivan to interfere or warn Dempsey, and although he hesitated as Sharkey went down, the referee quickly took up the count for a "ten."

To some observers it appeared Dempsey's right was several inches below the waist line and therefore a foul. To others it appeared on the border line while just as many more were confident the punch was fair. The referee's decision appeared upheld when Dr. William Walker, boxing commission's official physician, declared after examination of Sharkey that no evidence of injury or a

Will Make No Appeal
Sharkey firmly believed the blow was foul.

While believing his fighter was fouled half a dozen times, Manager Buckley said he would not appeal the decision.

Sharkey will seek solace and renewed nerve force in a fishing trip in Nova Scotia. This was to be his destination "win or lose."

Leaving New York, he intends to drive home to Boston with Mrs. Sharkey. The fighter's first thought upon leaving the ring was of his wife and family. While the battle was being waged last night, Mrs. Sharkey sat alone in their hotel room. First news came to her faintly in the shouts of newshy: "Dempsey wins by knockout."

CUBS BACK IN FIRST POST AS RESULT DEFEAT

But Pirates Dropped Couple to Braves at Same Time

BY THE AP

The Cubs were back at the top of the National League today because Pittsburgh lost a double header to Boston 2-1 and 5-2. The Cubs failed to solve Pruett's offerings and lost to Philadelphia 7-3. Neither Bush nor Jones had anything to bother the Phillies who slammed out 13 hits.

The Giants tried a ninth inning drive against St. Louis but they lost 7-6. Coming to bat five runs behind, they scored 5 runs for a tie. In the tenth Devermore threw wild to third and Bottomley crossed with the winning run. One of Frisch's 3 hits was a homer.

Cincinnati and Brooklyn battled 13 innings before the Reds came out on top 2-1.

Conally had the New York Yankees in hand until the 8th when the Hugmen put across 4 runs and took the game 4-1.

Philadelphia won the series opener from Cleveland 8-3 hitting Shaute hard.

A double by Bennett, with the bases full in the 9th game gave St. Louis a victory over Washington 5-4. The second game was halted in the seventh by darkness with the teams deadlocked 2 all. Harris was banished for arguing with an umpire.

Regan's homer with a run on base failed to keep Boston from defeat, Detroit winning 7-3.

DEMPSEY HOLDS DISPUTED BLOW WAS NOT A FOUL

In High Spirits He Plans Short Rest in Hollywood

New York, July 22—(AP)—Jack Dempsey, buoyed to high spirits by his knockout of Jack Sharkey, prepared today for trip to his wife in Hollywood before settling down in a few weeks to train for his fight with Gene Tunney.

Dempsey was as tickled as a boy with a new toy. His old confidence seemed restored. He slapped and mauled "Jerry the Greek," his trainer, as though little of his energy had been lost in the conflict.

He declared he never felt himself badly hurt by Sharkey's punches although he admitted he was jarred several times especially in the first round.

Dempsey came out in good condition, but his face was quite bruised and it was necessary to take several stitches in cuts over his eyes.

Dempsey declared the right hook to the body that started Sharkey downward in the seventh was not foul. He said he felt Sharkey sag and whipped over his left for the finishing stroke.

"It was a tough fight, one of the hardest I have ever had," Dempsey said. "Give Sharkey all the credit in the world for being a good game fighter."

Says Next Battle Will be in Chicago

Chicago, July 22—(AP)—The Herald and Examiner says all obstacles to Jack Dempsey comeback bout with Gene Tunney for the world's heavyweight title in Chicago in September were cleared away in New York last night at a meeting between Promoter Tex Rickard and a committee of three Chicagoans.

The selected site, Soldier's Field, is expected to accommodate the biggest crowd and draw the biggest gate in the history of pugilism. At least 250,000 spectators could be accommodated. Rickard, it was understood, asked a $40 top for ringside seats.

Tunney Has Kind Words for Every- one After Battle

BY BRIAN BEEL

Associated Press Sports Writer
New York, July 22—(AP)—If Jack Dempsey has been away, he has come back. So said Gene Tunney, who knows. "I never saw him fight better," said the champion as Jack Sharkey, the confident, was being carried to his corner after the knockout.

"Yes, Dempsey can hit," Tunney said. "I think Jack was better than he was against me in Philadelphia. Surely we should have a great return bout."

"No one can accuse me of holding Dempsey lightly. I know how good he is. I know it before I won from him, and I have not changed my opinion. If I see a chance to win, I will start. He will win many bouts before he is through."

CHAPTER I
"GOOD morning, Aunt Flora." Vera Victoria Cameron raised her glass-shielded eyes from the morning paper which she had been reading as she ate her breakfast, and allowed them to rest with gravity and forbearance upon her pretty but slightly time-worn aunt, who was trailing pink chiffon draperies into the small dining room of the apartment which Mrs. Cartwright shared, because of temporary loneliness, with her young niece.

"Good morning, Vee-Vee." Flora Cartwright sighed, laying a delicate, highly manicured hand against her tired blue eyes. "But do you mind if I ask you not to use that brisk, cheerful, business-like voice this morning? It is really more than I can bear, darling. What are you eating? Prunes? Coddled eggs? Whole wheat toast? It is positively amazing to me that you can stand the sight of so much food so early in the morning."

"It is a quarter past eight, Aunt Flora—" Vera Cameron began, a flush rising from her throat to her brow, against which flat wide braids of alic but uninteresting brown hair lay like a crown of virtue. Behind the sparkling lenses of her horn-rim spectacles her eyes, their color disguised by the amber tint of the glasses, filled with treacherous tears.

"Oh, good heavens, child, spare me!" Flora Cartwright pleaded, then broke into an amused, indulgent chuckle. "I know the whole story! You've been up since seven o'clock. You woke exactly on the dot, sprang right out of bed, did calisthenics for exactly fifteen minutes, took an ice-cold shower, brushed that indecently and unfashionably long brown hair of yours exactly one hundred strokes of a stiff-bristled brush, timed yourself while you plaited it, gave yourself a ten-minute manicure, dressed yourself in what the 'Business Woman's Magazine' prescribes as a suitable costume for the efficient young secretary, made your bed, straightened your room to apple-pie order, cooked your breakfast, and ate it—all on schedule to the half minute. You are a great trial to me, Vee-Vee," she sighed humorously. "But I hope you made me some good strong coffee and squeezed a couple of oranges into a glass and set it in a bowl of cracked ice for me. I could forgive you anything—even for being the world's most efficient and perfect private secretary—if you did those two little things for me."

Vera Cameron's grave, unrouged mouth twitched into a half-smile as she rose and walked toward the kitchenette. Not even the severe lines of her black serge suit, the skirt of which reached halfway to her modest black silk ankles, could conceal the natural youth and buoyancy and slenderness of her tall body.

"Thank you, darling," Flora Cameron sighed gratefully, when her niece set coffee, cream, and a glass of orange juice before her. "Has the mail come yet? Wild horses couldn't drag me out of bed at this ungodly hour if it were not the first of the month."

"Not yet," Vera answered briefly, her eyes straying again to the morning paper as she raised her cup of tea to her lips.

"I can never make up my mind whether to hate the first of the month or adore it," Flora Cartwright remarked, her voice becoming chatty cheerful as the hot coffee took effect. "The bundle of bills—I'm sure I can't possibly spend as much as the shops charge me with—offset by one long, slim, legal envelope with my alimony check in it. Be very sure, my darling, that the man you marry has no conscientious objections to paying alimony. Men are becoming so—so materialistic these days."

"My suitors are not so numerous that I have reached the necessity of classifying them according to whether they will or will not pay alimony," Vera Cameron retorted wittily. "And I might add that I should never dream of asking alimony if my marriage—purely problematical as that event is—should prove disastrous."

"Oh, my lord!" Flora Cartwright groaned, then laughed a throaty, delicious chuckle. "Do you talk to your boss like that, darling? I should think the poor dear would try to arrange to spend all his time playing golf if you do."

"I certainly don't discuss alimony and my matrimonial prospects with my employer," Vera countered sharply, but her mouth, which frequently annoyed her by being childish and soft and sweet unless she held it in very firmly, trembled betrayingly.

"I was referring, Vee-Vee, to the tones of your voice, the exalted character of your rhetoric, and not to the subject matter of your discourse, I assure you—oh, good grief, I'm talking like you! Vee-Vee, if you don't reform, you're going to ruin me! I'm such an imitative monkey. Do you know what I said to Peter Darrow last night, the poor darling?"

"I haven't an idea," Vera said, setting her tea cup down with a clatter. "But I do think you ought to be ashamed of yourself for getting that infant into such a state about you that he hangs around here every night in the week—"

"You exaggerate, dearest," Flora Cartwright grinned at her, her delicate little hand patting the deep, flat parcel wave in her tinted blond hair. "He isn't here every night. Husband number two insists on two evenings a week. If he hadn't been such an awfully poor sport about alimony I'd marry him again. But let me tell you what I said to Peter, the poor dear—"

"There's the postman's ring," Vera interrupted, rising hastily from the table. "I'll bring you your mail, but I'll have to run then, or I'll be late at the office."

When Vera returned with the mail, she carried her black felt hat and her dull-kid black leather handbag and a well-filled brief case in her hands.

"Did my alimony check come?" Flora demanded eagerly. "Oh, thank the gods of widows and orphans! Toss those bills to the sideboard, darling. I don't want to spoil my hour of gloating by the sight of them. Nicky isn't such a bad old scout, is he? I wonder if he's happy with that new wife of his? She's a red-head, I hear. Poor Nicky!" she sighed affectionately, as how pretty fingers tore at the long legal envelope. "It's dated April 29," she commented, as she scanned the check. "April 29! That's an anniversary of mine. I'm almost positive! Let's see—did I marry Nicky on April 29 or was it May? When a woman has been married four times—oh, must you go, darling? Will you be home for dinner?"

"Why do you ask?" Vera demanded bitterly. "Of course I shall be home for dinner unless I eat at the Automat alone! But if you're going out—"

"Peter wants me to dine with him, go to a theater, then to a night club," her aunt admitted, sighing a little from last night's weariness, but there was a tender smile on her lips—lips that her niece had never seen without rouge. "Bring home one of the young men from the office and go out with us, darling. It would do you good."

"I'm afraid my employers wouldn't agree with you that it does a secretary good to dance till all hours of the night," Vera retorted, but her aunt understood the flush that swept over Vera's smooth, freckled cheeks to which check in it. Be very sure, my darling, that the man you marry has no conscientious objections to paying alimony. Men are becoming so—so materialistic these days."

"My suitors are not so numerous that I have reached the necessity of classifying them according to whether they will or will not pay alimony," Vera Cameron retorted wittily. "And I might add that I should never dream of asking alimony if my marriage—purely problematical as that event is—should prove disastrous."

"Oh, my lord!" Flora Cartwright groaned, then laughed a throaty, delicious chuckle. "Do you talk to your boss like that, darling? I should think the poor dear would try to arrange to spend all his time playing golf if you do."

"I certainly don't discuss alimony and my matrimonial prospects with my employer," Vera countered sharply, but her mouth, which frequently annoyed her by being childish and soft and sweet unless she held it in very firmly, trembled betrayingly.

"I was referring, Vee-Vee, to the tones of your voice, the exalted character of your rhetoric, and not to the subject matter of your discourse, I assure you—oh, good grief, I'm talking like you! Vee-Vee, if you don't reform, you're going to ruin me! I'm such an imitative monkey. Do you know what I said to Peter Darrow last night, the poor darling?"

"I haven't an idea," Vera said, setting her tea cup down with a clatter. "But I do think you ought to be ashamed of yourself for getting that infant into such a state about you that he hangs around here every night in the week—"

"You exaggerate, dearest," Flora Cartwright grinned at her, her delicate little hand patting the deep, flat parcel wave in her tinted blond hair. "He isn't here every night. Husband number two insists on two evenings a week. If he hadn't been such an awfully poor sport about alimony I'd marry him again. But let me tell you what I said to Peter, the poor dear—"

"There's the postman's ring," Vera interrupted, rising hastily from the table. "I'll bring you your mail, but I'll have to run then, or I'll be late at the office."

When Vera returned with the mail, she carried her black felt hat and her dull-kid black leather handbag and a well-filled brief case in her hands.

"Did my alimony check come?" Flora demanded eagerly. "Oh, thank the gods of widows and orphans! Toss those bills to the sideboard, darling. I don't want to spoil my hour of gloating by the sight of them. Nicky isn't such a bad old scout, is he? I wonder if he's happy with that new wife of his? She's a red-head, I hear. Poor Nicky!" she sighed affectionately, as how pretty fingers tore at the long legal envelope. "It's dated April 29," she commented, as she scanned the check. "April 29! That's an anniversary of mine. I'm almost positive! Let's see—did I marry Nicky on April 29 or was it May? When a woman has been married four times—oh, must you go, darling? Will you be home for dinner?"

"Why do you ask?" Vera demanded bitterly. "Of course I shall be home for dinner unless I eat at the Automat alone! But if you're going out—"

"Peter wants me to dine with him, go to a theater, then to a night club," her aunt admitted, sighing a little from last night's weariness, but there was a tender smile on her lips—lips that her niece had never seen without rouge. "Bring home one of the young men from the office and go out with us, darling. It would do you good."

"I'm afraid my employers wouldn't agree with you that it does a secretary good to dance till all hours of the night," Vera retorted, but her aunt understood the flush that swept over Vera's smooth, freckled cheeks to which rouge was a stranger. If Vera could conceivably so far forget herself as to ask one of her fellow-workers to spend an evening with her, he would almost certainly refuse the invitation.

"Besides," Vera added, "I have every hope of stepping into a promotion today. Gladys Holmes, who has been secretary to Mr. Canfield, the president, for more than a year, left Saturday to be married, and I expect to get her position. The job pays fifty a week, ten more than I'm getting now."

"You say her name was Gladys?" Mrs. Cartwright mused. "Was she a Gladys sort of person, dear? A cuddly little blond, perhaps?"

"She is very pretty—chestnut hair and blue eyes," Vera admitted. "But I don't see what that has to do with it—"

"Don't you, darling? I'm afraid you may find out. But don't mind me. After all, I'm only a pretty parasite, as you've so often reminded me, dear—a shameless, useless creature who has buried two husbands and divorced two others. I hope you get the job, and that you spend the extra ten a week on peach-colored silk underwear for the good of your soul."

"You know I'm trying to save money—" Vera began resentfully, but her eyes betrayed her for an instant by becoming misty.

"And succeeding nobly," her aunt reminded her, laughing. "You must have at least three thousand dollars saved toward your retirement into the old ladies' home, and you're still only twenty-four years old. My dear, when I was twenty-four I had buried my first husband and divorced my second—and was engaged to my third, if memory serves me rightly. And I was handicapped by this horrible little nose—" she tapped the maligned feature with a scornful forefinger.

"If I had had a nose like yours, that is absolutely wasted on you, because you refuse to make the most of it—"

"Oh, quit picking on me, Aunt Flora!"

"And your mouth, if you'd listen to reason and put just a tiny touch of lip rouge on it, would be absolutely the most kissable I've ever seen—" her aunt's laughing drawl followed the girl as she fled from the dining room.

Vera Cameron ran gracefully and fleetly across Riverside Drive, swung to the steps of a great lumbering green bus, climbed up the winding staircase and found a seat beside a young man, who glanced up hopefully from his paper.

There was no reason, Vera told herself angrily, why she should blush like an idiotic school girl or like a sex-starved old maid, just because an anemic youth who probably made less than she did dropped his seeking eyes hastily to his newspaper. If he had dared to try to flirt with her she would have squelched him. But would she? She was startled at the question which elbowed its impudent way through the well-trained grooves of her mind.

But—she sighed and settled back into her seat resignedly—she did have to wear glasses, and she was freckled-faced, and her hair was mossy. So the only thing left for her to do was to be the most efficient secretary in the Peach Bloom Cosmetics Company's offices. Ever since she had graduated from business college when she was nineteen, she had devoted herself with deep seriousness to making herself a business success. She had held positions in three companies, had started work at fifteen dollars a week and was now getting forty. Today she would be promoted to fifty a week.

LEE CO. PEOPLE IN CALIFORNIA'S ANNUAL PICNIC

150 Former Residents of This Community Enjoyed Reunion

(Telegraph Special Service)
Los Angeles, Calif.—Not without thy wondrous story, Illinois, can we write the nation's glory, Illinois, but "O You California."

Perhaps the above double sentiment would be the united feelings of the 150 Dixon and Lee county folks who gathered in lovely Echo Park, Los Angeles, Saturday, July 16 for the eighteenth annual reunion and picnic of the former residents along the Rock River, who have migrated to this sunny land along the Pacific.

It was a happy reminiscent crowd of young and old, some charter members and some registering for the first time, but all enjoying the bit of old Lee county transferred to these western shores and the Land of Eternal Youth.

The writer has attended each of the eighteen picnics of these folks and feels that in point of congeniality this one exceeds all. Some old faces were missed and some new ones were welcomed: Dorothy Dimick Hatten, Alta Vall Brierton, Helen Plein Hett, Mrs. Blanche Faust of Franklin Grove, Roy Self and many others in the appended list being tenderfeet among us.

Fine Picnic Dinner.

Mrs. B. O. Boothby, assisted by Mrs. Frank Morris and Mrs. F. H. Garrison, ably arranged the picnic dinner, which was spread in true California cafeteria style, and in such a generous way that Frank Downing, a generous way that Frank Downing, "Doc" M. M. Green, Frank Hatch, Harry Kimmel, Clarence E. Krimbill, Harvey Rowland, L. E. Appleford and all the other hungry guests were for once filled.

Following the banquet a short business meeting was held and the following officers for the society were elected for 1928:

President and Secretary—George E. Krimbill, 348 Carroll Park, W. Long Beach, Calif.

Treasurer—W. B. Johnson, Chairman Banquet Committee—Mrs. B. O. Boothby.

Flying Heroes Home

Wife Anxious When Dempsey Was "Shaky"

Hollywood, Calif., July 22.—(AP)—Jack Dempsey's victory may have been expected by his wife Estelle Taylor, but she passed many anxious moments before the radio told her her husband had been successful.

Announcement that Dempsey was getting shaky in the third round nearly caused her to collapse. She knelt and prayed.

Later after the cheery, "Hello Babe, I'm coming home" had come over the radio from her husband, and she smiled at her earlier fears and said she had prayed that "the best man win and that Sharkey wouldn't be hurt badly."

An hour after the fight, Dempsey called his wife by telephone. He assured her he was all right and that he would start home by Saturday at the latest.

Scrappers Divided Purse of $450,000

New York, July 22.—(AP)—Jack Dempsey and Jack Sharkey split a purse of slightly more than $450,000 for their battle which drew a gate of $1,075,000 and attendance of $2,000, according to Tex Rickard's estimate. It was the fourth million dollar fight in ring history, in all of which Dempsey has been a principal.

Here are the promoter's figures: Dempsey's share $252,759. Total receipts, $1,075,000. Sharkey's share, $206,802. Federal tax $53,750. Rickard's share $45,188.

When a Man Loves

By ALLIE LOWE MILES

Copyright 1927, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.
John Barrymore in "WHEN A MAN LOVES" is a Warner Bros. Picture adaptation of this novel.

SYNOPSIS
In old France, Fabien, a youth as handsome as good, intends to train for the priesthood. But in Amiens he meets Manon Lescaut, a beautiful orphan, being taken to a convent by her only relative, a brother, who doesn't want to be bothered with her. The brother, seeing Ravoir, a rich connoisseur of women, feasting his eyes upon her, suddenly realizes Manon's worldly value, and bargains her for gold to Ravoir, who plans to take her to Paris. But Fabien, forgetting his plan to be a priest, steals Ravoir's coach and carries Manon happily off.

The coach travelled on through the morning sunshine toward Paris. At twilight, that same night, Manon and Fabien found themselves on the streets of Paris. They had not been stopped en route and the fear of being caught had vanished with their growing absorption in each other. The more Fabien saw of Manon the more perfect he thought her. Her beauty, her heart, her mind and her very gentleness took such a binding and agreeable hold on him that he predicted perfect future happiness in its enduring influence. Carrying their meager belongings they mingled with the crowds. Walking along, hand in hand, interested in each other more than in usual with pedestrians, they formed a sharp contrast to the strutting dandies and gay students paying casual court to pretty griseettes, their companions of the moment. If Fabien had not been so absorbed in Manon he would have noticed and resented the admiring and covetous glances showered upon her by the dashing Guards officers. These men of the world had not seen a woman as refreshingly lovely as Manon for many a day. To them, her natural charm was far more attractive than the artificial beauty of the aristocratic white wigged occupants of the chairs that passed along the street. But Manon saw one of these gorgeous creatures and immediately felt pale and insignificant by comparison. Strangely enough, a woman is never satisfied with unadorned beauty. Perhaps it is the pleasure she derives from adding brighter color, new lines and a different expression to her countenance. She feels that she is making a more interesting creation of herself. Her mood invariably brightens with the application of rouge. "Fabien, look at that lady! I didn't know there were such pretty things as she has on!" Manon's awakened love for adornment made her wide eyed. Just then the throngs scattered to the side of the road as mounted guards cantered ahead of the King's great golden coach and cleared the way. In the general excitement Manon and Fabien were the only ones who did not realize that King Louis XV was passing by. In fact their absorption in each other and total ignorance of what was taking place almost caused an accident. The outriders were forced to rein in their horses to keep from trampling down the young couple that went merrily on as though everything had been stopped for their special benefit instead of the King's!

His Majesty was surprised at being tolled to such an abrupt halt. It was most unusual. Something extraordinary must have caused the stop. King Louis was not the type of royalty to sit back waiting to be informed of issues at hand. If he wanted to do a thing—he went ahead. If he wanted to find out anything he investigated the matter personally. That is why the people on the street had such a splendid opportunity to see their king; for he raised the silken coach shade himself. "Oh, Fabien, the poor old man!"

The PENNY PRINCESS

BEGIN HERE TODAY
VERA VICTORIA CAMERON, plain but efficient secretary in the Peach Bloom Cosmetics Co., lives with her mother, FLORA CARTWRIGHT. Flora is a frivolous creature and has been divorced several times. She cannot understand Vera's lack of interest in men and her devotion to business.

The story opens with Vera on her way to work on the morning that she is expecting a big promotion. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER 1A

FROM fifteen to fifty dollars a week in five years had not been easy, and she had not always been happy, but—she was succeeding. She had taken business so very seriously.

She had never had a real sweetheart. Calvin Trumble, who had wanted a "helpmeet" who could earn more than her half of the expenses, didn't count; neither did Aunt Flora's discarded suitor, middle-aged Mr. Perdue, who had talked pathetically of his broken heart and his motherless little children. How did Aunt Flora do it? She had had four husbands, could marry again tomorrow if she wanted to. And Aunt Flora was useless, a spendthrift, a pleasure-mad, vain woman.

When she entered the foyer of the twenty-two story office building where the Peach Bloom Cosmetics Company occupied an entire floor—the factory was in Jersey—she was again the brisk, business-like young private secretary. A pleasant excitement routed her depression.

She went briskly to her office, a little cubicle outside the private office of the sales manager, opened her desk, arranged notebook and pencils ready for a call from her boss whenever he happened to stroll in—late as usual on Mondays, filed a basket of correspondence which she had answered on Saturday, and was, at ten o'clock, making a careful graphic representation of a sales report on business for the month of March when an office boy skidded into the room.

"The old man" wanted to see you, Miss Cameron," he grumbled at her. Any other girl in the world would have snatched up a vanity case and powdered her nose before obeying that summons. Vera rose instantly, did not even pat the smooth, flat braids of her brown hair, for she knew that they lay in immaculate order against her brow and over her small ears. She was guilty of one evidence of vanity, however. She took from his hanger the severe little jacket to her new suit, buttoned it snugly over the white silk blouse, arranged collar and cuffs with quick, deft fingers and then walked briskly but unhurriedly down the long corridor to the door marked "Mr. Canfield."

She tapped, with fingers slightly cold with nervousness, upon the door labeled "Private." As she opened the door to Mr. Canfield's loud bellow of invitation, a girl almost collided with her, a girl leaving Mr. Canfield's private office with an open notebook in her hand.

"Mr. Canfield will see you now, Miss Cameron," the girl spoke in a lilting, sweet voice, a voice that fairly rippled with triumph.

"Thank you, Miss Fitch," Vera answered, her voice cold and even. Rosemary Fitch! Rosemary! Aunt Flora's mocking, fond warning—"I'm afraid you may find out"—came to Vivian's ears, in which the blood pounded sickeningly, as cleverly as if her aunt were there, noting her defeat, her in-

With a strange new hope in her heart, she lifted her hand to knock on the door beyond which Jerry Macklyn was no doubt awaiting her impatiently.

"Come in, Miss Cameron. How are you today? Fine, I hope," Mr. Canfield boomed cordially. "You see we're making some changes around here—"

Vera closed the door with an ice-cold, trembling hand and walked jerkily to the seat beside the executive's desk.

"Mr. Canfield," she began tremulously, but courageously, for anger made her brave. "Is Miss Fitch going to take Miss Holmes' place as your secretary?"

"Well, yes," the big, broad old man nodded, his keen, slate-gray eyes narrowing as he regarded her quizzically. "Have you any objections, Miss Cameron?"

"I—I had hoped to be promoted to the position myself," Vera told him, her mouth, her adorable, kissable mouth held firmly to keep it from trembling. "I have been with the firm longer than any of the other girls, now that Miss Holmes is gone, and I—I know I'm a better secretary than—than—Miss Fitch."

"You mean that you can take dictation faster, turn out more letters, make better graphic representations than Miss Fitch, don't you?" Mr. Canfield asked gently, almost pityingly.

"I certainly do," Vera retorted, tears welling up in her eyes, to her intense disgust.

"I agree with you, as to those qualifications, Miss Cameron. You are probably the most efficient secretary this organization has ever had—"

"Then why—?" Vera interrupted him indignantly

Good Thoughts for Good People

Recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

PEOPLE'S COLUMN

Dr. Sickels' Memory of Father Jno. Dixon

Dear Editor:—In the edition of your paper which has just reached me in camp I notice your inquiry for early recollections of Father Dixon. In the very early seventies he passed our house almost every day, his snow white hair hanging on his shoulders. We boys always spoke to him. He wore a wide-brimmed black soft felt hat always. I remember on three or four occasions the Pottawattomie Indians came to visit him. They camped in a little woods just north of the I. C. R. R., east of where the Independent oil storage tanks now stand. They were dressed in the

My last distinct recollection was when he stopped two of us from fighting in a wood, about where the Jos. McCleary residence now stands. He parted us and remarked: "Good little boys should not fight." I further remember distinctly marching at the time of his funeral.
